Southern Pondering

Living in Georgia proves groundhog prognostication is a fallacy. Punxsutawney Phil and Georgia's own General Beauregard Lee both blew it in central Georgia. We've already touched 80 degrees and are headed there again and will stay there for the near future. What does that mean? Lawns are waking, trees will be dusting the air with layers of pollen sooner rather than later. Thanks, Phil and Beau!

Good news! I love warmer weather and, oh yeah, daylight savings begins next weekend. I'm tired of short days and early evenings. Bring on the sunshine! My creative juices flow better in the spring and summer...

How about you? Are you ready for the change in the weather? Are you tired of the naked trees and flowerless gardens? Are you ready to put away the sweaters, jackets, and sweatshirts, and slip into shorts and flip flops again.

Carolinan International Book Fair,
Greenville, SC, April 24-25.

As for me, my creative energy peaks when I am on my deck beneath the canopy over my pergola with my legs stretched out soaking up the sun rays. And boy do I need me creative juices flowing at full throttle this spring. Read novel news!

Novel News

My next Southern novel, formerly entitled The Road Back to Shiloh is now titled Miles of Memories as the manuscript is finding its way to discover the best champion (literary agent/publisher editor) to bring it to you. It was inspired by an actual family cross-country vacation but has evolved to something much bigger and more meaningful.

Sam Simmons, a longtime reliable figure in Shiloh, has developed early signs of dementia following the loss of his wife. Family and friends come together to take him on a cross-country road trip aboard a museum-bound, vintage motor coach. They expect a few laughs and lasting memories but discover reconciliation and redemption that only happens when the past greets the future in the present moment.

This soulful Southern odyssey blends the humor of family and friendship with the ache of regrets as three generations experience forgiveness, forgetfulness, and faith as they travel on historic roads from California back to Georgia.

While my new story finds its publishing home, I am hard at work preparing my first three Shiloh novels for Sanctuary's Tenth Year Anniversary by creating updated Definitive Anniversary Editions of all three books, including collectible three-book set. Stay tuned...
